THE END

THE WAY TO A MAN'S HEART

A CHORUS of long, low whistles echoed through the history class. The door had just opened, and framed in the doorway was a smiling redhead, dressed in a chic black wool dress like nothing else that had entered a Central High classroom before in all its history. An undertone of low talk took over the room, and Mr. Peters rapped sharply on his desk for attention.

The redhead cast another smile over her appreciative audience of male students, and closed the door behind her as she approached Mr. Peters, batting her eyelashes.

"Er, ah, that is, I . . ." stammered Mr. Peters. He too, was obviously impressed.

The girl took over. "I am Rusty Cromwell, Mr. Peters. My family just took over the big white mansion on Oak Hill, and I am a new student here. The dean said I should report to your history class. And here I am."

The boys strained to get a better look at Rusty Cromwell, while the girls in the room only glanced at each other helplessly.

Judy Morrison poked her friend Sally. "Boy, is SHE a snob. That dress must have cost fifty dollars. And did you see the way she gave the boys the once-over?"

Yes, Rusty Cromwell was a menace, and after the class was over, Judy and the other girls walked from the room discussing the new girl, while Rusty stayed behind to roll her eyes at the boys and Mr. Peters.

Central High had never had a student like Rusty before. Central Corners was a middle-class town, but the house on Oak Hill was in a world of its own. The owner of the Central Corners Steel Company had always occupied the twenty-two room mansion, and Rusty Cromwell's father had recently bought the company, and moved his family to the imposing white structure that was surrounded by acres of gardens, and boasted a tennis court and a swimming pool of its own.

Judy thought about what had happened that morning in History as she took Bill's arm on the way to the movies that night.

Apparently Bill hadn't forgotten the incident either, for he turned to Judy and remarked, "Boy, that Rusty Cromwell sure is a looker. And guess what . . . after History, she invited a couple of the fellas over to her place for a swimming party. Golleeee . . . she must be slick in a bathing suit."

"So," Judy thought, "She's campaigning already to steal all our boyfriends, just as I suspected she would. I could see it in her eye the minute she entered the classroom."

Judy said, "Not REALLY, Bill . . . wasn't that generous of her?" She pretended not to be disturbed.

"Sure," answered the elated Bill, "We're all going over this Saturday afternoon. I . . . I may be a little late Saturday night for our date."

"Hal going too?" she asked. Hal was Sally's best beau, and Judy was certain Rusty would make a play for him, too.

"Hal? Sure, he is. All the guys in the history class are going. Who would MISS it?" answered Bill.

Judy tried to concentrate on the movie, but she could only think of the way the other girls would feel when they heard that juicy bit of news. "Well," she consoled herself, "maybe we'll be lucky and it'll rain."

And Judy woke up Saturday morning, smiling broadly. It WAS raining. Certain the swimming party would be called off, she waited until she had breakfast, then called Bill on the phone. His mother answered.

"Hello, Judy, dear. Bill? Oh, he left about ten minutes ago. Yes, Rusty something-or-other called for him in her car. The swimming party was called off because of rain, but she decided to make it an indoor lunch barbecue, and picked up some of the boys early so they could play a little ping-pong first and work up an appetite."

Judy was crushed. She called Sally and told her the news. When Sally had stopped shouting threats meant for Hal, Judy got a word in edgewise. She said that she wished there were something they could do to make Rusty look pretty silly in all the boys' eyes so they'd forget about her and settle down to being their own boyfriends again. Both girls sighed and agreed that while Rusty had $50 dresses and swimming pools and tennis courts to offer, it would be a tough thing to do.

Saturday night came and Judy got first-hand information from Bill about the barbecue. The boys had had a marvelous time, and, Bill added, Rusty was throwing a big shindig the following Saturday evening.

"Hmn . . . just for the boys, I suppose?" Judy muttered.

And just as Judy suspected, it was JUST for the boys. Her mind began to whirr, the moment she could, she got to a phone and called Sally again.

After telling Sally about Rusty's plans, she went into a plan of their own. She said, "Sally, in order to have a good party, there's got to be food, if I know those fellas. And with no food, they'll be bored stiff. even with Rusty around. Now, if I . . ."

She continued talking for a few minutes, then hung up, and made some further calls. She called Hank's Soda Supply, she phoned the delicatessan, she called the candy store, and the bakery. And each coversation went something like this . . .

"Hello . . . I'm phoning for Miss Rusty Cromwell. I think she placed an order with you for Saturday. She did? Good . . . well, she wants to cancel it . . . yes, EVERYTHING . . . she changed her mind. 'Bye."

At Rusty's home on Saturday night, it was getting near eight, when the boys were supposed to arrive. Rusty couldn't understand why the hot dogs, the soda, and the cake and candy hadn't been delivered. When the boys arrived, she really began to worry. For a while she took turns playing ping pong . . . she tried to stall for time by playing some of her records, but it was just no good. At about nine-thirty, one of the boys poked another, and whispered.

Hal nudged Bill. "Hey, Bill . . . you getting hungry? Rusty told us not to have supper home, and I haven't eaten since noon."

Poor Rusty! The boys became fidgety, and their stomachs rumbled with hunger, for none of them had had any supper. Pretty soon Bill and Hal made their apologies, and left. And as they started out the living room door, they heard some of the others saying their goodbyes downstairs in the game room.

"Let's head over toward Judy's house . . . we usually raid the icebox Saturday nights," said Bill, and Hal nodded, too hungry to say anything else.

When they reached Judy's house, Sally and Judy greeted their boyfriends at the door.

"Well, boys . . . we didn't expect you tonight," Sally said as she winked to Judy, "so we've been busy whipping up some chocolate fudge. In fact, we were just about to raid the icebox. There's cold chicken, and some pickles. But you probably ate yourselves sick at Rusty's, so if you'll excuse us . . ."

"HEY . . . WAIT . . . WAIT . . ." Bill screamed catching Judy's arm. "We . . . we didn't stay . . . we decided that raiding the ice-box was more fun'n being with Rusty. C-can we have some fudge, too . . . PLEASE?"

The boys were led into the kitchen . . . and four places were set at the table . . . as if company had been expected. The boys got the joke, and laughed between mouthfuls of chicken, pickles and chocolate fudge.

But Judy only winked at Sally, confident that the way to a man's heart was with chocolate fudge and pickles, and not $50 dresses and tennis courts.

Demand far exceeds supply—Work is steady in good times or bad—Offers opportunities for travel, fine social contacts, luxurious living. Win respect and honor in this humane profession!

The acute shortage of nurses has created a national emergency. That is why Practical Nurses—who can be trained in 12 weeks of interesting home study—are demanded more and more in hospitals and in homes of convalescents all over the country.

No months or years of apprenticeship are needed. You don't start as a beginner at low pay. You don't need a high-school education to study and graduate at home, through the Lincoln School of Practical Nursing. In your own home, in spare time—without giving up your present job—you can train for your first well-paid duties as a Practical Nurse. Within 12 short weeks you can be ready to enjoy the security and good income; the social advantages; luxurious living in homes of well-to-do people; and opportunities for travel that make Practical Nursing such a wonderful profession for women of all ages.

You can easily find out all about Practical Nursing without investing any money. Simply fill out and mail the coupon below (or a postcard) for a free copy of Lincoln's fascinating 16-page book, "Careers in Nursing." Read about all the things you will learn—how easily you will absorb the training. See the wonderful opportunities open to you. Contrast the life of a nurse with that of any other profession open to women. Then see how this can be yours at an average fee of only $1.74 per lesson.

Hundreds of stenographers, office clerks, factory workers and maids have given up their "blind alley" drudgery to embrace the respected profession of Practical Nursing. Thus they have gained increased pay, steady work, and opportunities for contacts with interesting people of wealth and position, on a level of equality and respect. You certainly can do the same!

Send your name today. There is no charge, now or ever, for this interesting book. It is yours free, and postage prepaid. No salesman will call to bother you. Read it in the quiet of your own home. Then decide whether the romance of nursing appeals more to you than the drudgery of ordinary work. Mail the coupon today. This one little step may be the most important you've ever taken.

Shortage of Nurses Increases in U. S.

Washington—Medical men say the present shortage of nurses in this country is almost a national emergency. There will not be enough nurses to meet the demand until at least 1973,
